1. About This Handbook

The employee handbook provides general guidance about workplace practices, employee responsibilities, communication, attendance, leave, professional conduct, and working arrangements.

The handbook is intended to complement specific company policies rather than replace them. Where a specific approved policy provides a detailed requirement, employees should follow that policy.

2. Professional Conduct

Employees are expected to communicate respectfully with colleagues, managers, clients, and other stakeholders.

Employees should maintain professional behavior in meetings, written communication, collaborative work, and interactions with customers or partners.

3. Attendance and Meetings

Employees should attend scheduled meetings on time and remain available during assigned working hours.

When an employee cannot attend a scheduled meeting or expects to be unavailable, the employee should communicate the situation to the appropriate team member or manager.

4. Employee Responsibilities

Employees are responsible for completing assigned tasks, following approved processes, protecting company information, and communicating potential delays.

Employees should raise blockers and risks early rather than waiting until a deadline has passed.

5. Leave and Remote Work

Leave should be requested through the approved leave management process and is subject to the Leave Policy.

Remote work is governed by the Work From Home Policy. Employees should not assume that general handbook guidance overrides specific approval requirements.

6. Information Security

Employees must protect company information, credentials, devices, and access to enterprise systems. Credential sharing is prohibited.

Security incidents and suspected unauthorized access should be reported promptly through the appropriate company channel.

7. Policy Updates

Employees are responsible for following the latest approved version of applicable policies. Policies may be reviewed and updated as business, legal, technology, or security requirements change.

Employees should consult the relevant policy owner or Human Resources when they are unsure which policy applies.

8. Getting Help

Employees should first contact their reporting manager for questions related to day-to-day work. Human Resources can provide guidance on employee policies and processes.

For technical access, system availability, or security matters, employees should use the approved IT or security support channel.
